

Indiana Housing and Community Development Authority Announces

Home Energy Conservation Contractor Training Classes

The Indiana Housing and Community Development Authority (IHCDA) is now offering training, in partnership with Ivy Tech Community College and AC/C Tech for individuals who are interested in becoming contractors for the State's Home Energy Conservation Program. This training is provided to interested contractors with experience in HVAC, insulation and energy efficiency upgrades.

These contractors will be responsible for completing energy saving home repairs and improvements as determined by individual energy audits. Contractors completing this training will be eligible to perform services for state-selected Home Energy Conservation service providers. Repairs and improvements deemed necessary by energy audits will be contracted by these service providers.

This training is open to employees of contractors, independent contractors, and staff of state-selected Home Energy Conservation service providers at no cost. Previous construction or HVAC experience required. All candidates will undergo a background check. Training began June 3rd, with an option of daytime or evening class format at various AC/C Tech and Ivy Tech Campuses around the state. (Please see the list below of the campuses offering this training.) For more information or to register, please click on the links below.

<http://www.acctech.us>

<http://www.ivytech.edu/weatherization>

Ivy Tech and AC/C Tech Campuses offering Home Energy Conservation Contractor training for the State's Home Energy Conservation Program:

Columbus
Evansville
Fort Wayne
Gary
Indianapolis
Terre Haute
Valparaiso